

DATA DRIVEN INSIGHTS INTO HIGHER EDUCATION: ACCESS AND AFFORDABILITY IN TEXAS

AccessLex Institute's state-based sheets provide key insights into advanced degree enrollment and attainment, borrowing patterns, and broad student loan repayment and forgiveness trends. This data empowers students, administrators, and policymakers with the information needed to inform policies that protect and expand opportunities in higher education and beyond.

Advanced Degree Enrollment and Attainment

Graduate and professional students drive innovation, meet critical workforce demands, and strengthen their local communities. Examining enrollment and completion trends in your state highlights the importance of access and affordability to meet these goals.

Fall 2024 Advanced Degree Enrollment

209,707 graduate and professional students enrolled.

6,457 law students enrolled.

AY 2023-24 Advanced Degrees Awarded

76,345 advanced degrees were awarded.

2,231 law degrees were awarded.

Graduate and Professional Borrowing Patterns

Financing an advanced degree can often require taking on student loan debt. Borrowing patterns in your state — such as the number of recipients in graduate student loan programs during the 2024-25 academic year, including the Grad PLUS and Direct Unsubsidized programs — emphasizes the need for federal policies to ensure these programs remain accessible and affordable.

Student Loan Repayment at a Glance

Navigating student loan debt repayment is critical for long-term financial stability upon degree completion. Programs like income-driven repayment (IDR) provide relief by reducing monthly payment costs, but continued policy protections are essential.

1.12 million

borrowers are enrolled in IDR plans in your state as of September 2025.

$58.7 billion

in student loan balances were held by borrowers enrolled in IDR plans in your state as of September 2025.
